State level Workshop...

Hospitals and healthcare services are vital components of any well-ordered and humane society, and will indisputably be the recipients of societal resources. That hospital should be places of safety, not only for patients but also for the staff and for the general public. Quality of hospitals and healthcare services is of great interest to many, which is achieved by Hospital surveying & accreditation.

Accreditation provides a visible commitment by an organization to improve the quality of patient care, to ensure a safe environment and to continually work to reduce risks to patients and staff. It has gained worldwide attention as an effective quality evaluation and management tool. A growing number of hospitals in India are turning to accreditation agencies worldwide to both standardize their protocols and project their international quality of health care delivery.

In the hospital, the nursing team is critical to a quality program, due to the significant number of professionals and their direct and permanent practice with internal and external clients. The nurse interacts with all the areas of support, with autonomy and co-responsibility, through the instruments of organizational structure, such as internal regulations, organograms, routines, and communication and control systems.

There is an increasing focus on improving healthcare in order to ensure higher quality, greater access and better value for money. In recent years, training programmes have been developed to teach health professionals and students formal quality improvement methods. This workshop will be one among them...
